

I'm Still Riding the Swing Today

Is the perfect gift to express how much a parent's support has meant to a person through all the stages of their life by using "The Swing" as a metaphor. It is a gift that can be given at any time of the year. On Mother's day, Father's day, on all special occasions such as a graduation, a wedding day and of course at Christmas.

I'm Still Riding the Swing Today

Now that we're older it must be hard
To see an empty swing out in the yard

But someone's riding the swing with glee
If you look real close you will see it's me.
I ride that swing every once in a while
I think it makes my insides smile.

I see these things you don't perceive
I know it helps me to believe
In my God and in my life
And in myself and thru my strife.

I ride that swing in past and present
And I'm sure the future will be as pleasant.
Now, when I get cards or calls from you
Or sometimes when just thoughts come thru.

I really feel that special shove.
It's wonderful, cause, I know it's love.
So now, when you look at the swing today
Maybe you'll see it in a different way.

Cause, no one said it would be so grand
To feel the warmth of a parent's hand

The History of I'm Still Riding the Swing Today

The poem was written shortly after my husband received a letter from his father, and within it was a self described little ditty, the poem,

"The Swing."

It showed the love of a father and how he missed those days, "When they were small and playfully glee and somehow they depended on me."

My husband's response was

"I'm Still Riding the Swing Today"

We believe every person has someone who has pushed them with love along the way. We hope these words help you convey the love and gratitude you felt yesterday, as a child, today, as an adult, and the special love you will share in all the tomorrows to come with those who have loved and guided you.

Our Warmest Wishes,
